

ESCAPE FROM YOUR MIND
BREAKFREE FROM

P · R · I · S · O · N

My name is Gorr, Father of the Galactic Federation, bidding you welcome to a world unlike your own — mysterious,
deadly — where only the brave survive and the weak perish,
where iron nerves and ruthless skills are your only friends.

Come with me first and listen to my story, then close your eyes and teleport yourself through imagination into my world and begin the game that has no turning back — no surrender — only escape from Prison.

"CAPTURE"

Far into the future, beyond the 22nd century came the time of darkness and death, where hope was destroyed by fear, evil had consumed good and the passion to kill was the new god.

The rule of law became a myth of the distant past and only upheld by the few.

Jag Edwards was one such man working undercover in the open sewers they still called cities. It was his job to bust a powerful drugs ring which used a bakery as a front to manufacture pure white heroin, making more dough than any baker ever dreamed.

Jag had been stalking the gang for weeks amidst now the daily routine of riots at fuel stations and clothing factories. So far, each day, a different member of the gang came and went carrying large brown parcels but never at the same time of day or night.

Then the word came.

"Make your move Jag" said the Commissioner over his wrist-transmitter, "it's tonight or never. We got the word they're moving tonight – the whole gangs there".

"Yes sir", said Jag.

Here came the end to months of waiting and watching.

Jag entered the building and acting on the Termination Five Objective wiped out the entire gang in a furious shoot-out, wrecking the hide-out leaving nothing but heroin covered bodies.

But he was set up! The security forces mysteriously arrived immediately afterwards to arrest this "madman", for shooting ten innocent flour covered bakers.

The Star-Judge looked sternly over his eye glass directly at Jag who was stood in chains on a plinth, showered in a bright force-field light.

"The crime of which you have been found guilty", shouted the Star-Judge, "demands more than the death sentence can offer in retribution. Before I pass sentence have you anything to say?"

Jag, head bowed, stood silent. He could not believe this was happening. His police record, his decorations in the army, his recent bid for enrolment into the "Starchaser Inter-Galactic Peace Army", all now stood for nothing.

He slowly lifted his head and stared at the Star-Judge in total defiance. The sinews in each arm rippled, his face became tort with vehemence, beads of sweat glistened in his straw-like hair.

"I am innocent of these charges which I consider to be false and which cannot possibly be believed by the court."

The small audience in morbid attendance, stirred, realising the futility of his plea. The Star-Judge took off his glasses and with a sweeping gesture closed the "Galactic Community Rule Book" and placed it on one side.

"Very well," he sighed with almost a hiss, breathing out slowly with exasperation.

"You show no contrition for your heinous crimes. Yours is a position of trust, which to the communities detriment has turned you into a savage killer. The greater the power given the greater responsibility it demands. I sentence you to life abandonment on Altrax and may your god have mercy on your soul. Take him away."

Jag again bowed his head. Why hadn't his superiors saved him? They were deliberately framing him to get him out of the way. Now his thoughts, as he was led from the court to a waiting "Sprinter", turned to his fateful destination - Altrax!

"ALTRAX"

Altrax sits alone in quadrant seven of the Galactic Federation Territory set apart from orbiting moons, space colonies and warship ports, totally isolated from ordinary human existence.

Once sort after for its mineral and plutonium deposits by the "Interplanetary Development Corporation", it has long since been abandoned and is now solely used as a penal dumping ground for mass murderers and enemies of the Federation for whom capital punishment has not been a deterrent. Inmates are never seen again.

All awaits Jag Edwards.

During his confinement Jag listened to the vile rumours of Altrax from the mocking security guards.

"Ha, if the street gangs don't rip you to bits the lone runners will kill you for your clothes." Jag watches the guard light a cigarette. The light dies quickly as the air becomes thinner as they come closer to the planet.

"Yeh the only time anyone is seen again is when they find your body floating in low orbit . . . ah . . . ha," roared the other guard revealing black teeth under black whiskers and the lunatic grin of the possessed.

Time passes at an accelerated rate on Altrax with a shorter night than day. Darkness offers even more danger with increased gang activity with the added difficulty of moving about in the dark through treacherous streets.

Gangs of separate alien races battle for control of the city spawning tough violent leaders ready to confront any threat to their territory. A rat-like alien race of stooges move freely through gang land offering their services to the highest bidder.

Pools of toxic waste and bottomless trenches matrix the planet with pits of metal spikes making many paths treacherous and can only be avoided with the help of stooges. Proximity mines and snare explosives are scattered in various areas detonating in chain reactions to devastating effect.

Jag could only begin to guess how much of this was true. For years he had been hearing stories of inter-gang massacres and explosions that destroyed parts of the planet but people neither cared nor wanted to get involved. Neither had he, but now irony dictated that he would witness first hand whatever the planet had to offer.

Suddenly, it was time. A metallic voice echoed across the chamber, declaring that the craft was at tele-matt proximity. Jag was pushed from the craft across a black expanse towards a pool of red light, like a sun spot giving off red heat. Pushed under the light and before he could regain his balance, a beam of pure nuclear-ray energy tore Jag's atoms apart.

As the agony of crude teleportation subsided Jag fell to his knees on barren, silver soil, yielding only an image of death, lurking around every corner, its smell on every whisper of wind. Yet throughout the trial, and now, something whispered in the depth of his memory; a story he had heard in some sleazy neon pleasure ship some time ago.

Two years ago an unfortunate pleasure craft had ignored Altrax's warning beacons and strayed into the security force-field net, smashing its control centre and finally crashing onto the planets surface. The craft was wrecked but scans found no trace of the tiny one-man escape pod attached to the craft.

Jag thought about the rumour that rival gangs are still fighting each other to be first to find the pod and make the first escape from the prison that has claimed so many lives.

If the rumours are true, Jag Edwards must find the objects needed to survive and escape when he finds the pod. Then the wrongs will be put to right.

Just then, a shout goes out into the darkness and running can be heard. Jag, hands still chained, scrambled to his feet in an automatic survival response which in later days will help save his life.
